One trivia night to unite all

In a novel approach to introducing the topic of dying to Australians, Palliative Care Australia is hosting free trivia nights around the country to break the ice on the traditionally taboo subject.

All trivia nights are being held at 7pm local time on Friday 29 May 2015 to promote National Palliative Care Week, encouraging Aussies to 'celebrate life, and talk about death'.

PCA CEO Liz Callaghan said raising awareness in the community about death and dying was essential to get Aussies advocating for good care at the end of life.

"We thought this was a good way to engage the public by holding a fun event for all ages. The trivia nights will only have three palliative care questions thrown in – the rest will be general trivia as usual so if you're an avid lover of trivia get your team together and come for a fun night," she said.

Guest speakers will be introducing the nights giving the audience background as to why talking about death is important. From then on the night will include general knowledge questions, prizes and games in between rounds to keep the night fun and entertaining.

"It's a chance to bring people together to play trivia and talk about death in a welcoming and warm environment. We encourage people of all ages to come along and have a fun night out with friends and family," says PCA CEO Liz Callaghan.
